

al·luring
[al-ler-ring]

Adj.

- i. To be highly attractive
- ii. To attract with something desirable

Identity

- Lady 'I' you have a slim, 'gamine' figure.
- You have narrow hips, tend not to be too curvy and you look like you've just stepped off a nearby catwalk.
- If you put on weight, it's more of an extra layer rather than area focussed.

By the letter

- a. You can get away with light underwear choices (lucky you), but to up the femininity try a 'waspie' to nip in the waist and enlist a little bra boost in the form of a chicken fillet or two. Then insert wolf whistle here you're Lady 'X'.
- b. With you it's all about, choice, choice and CHOICE. You can wear unstructured styles that focus on quirky trend rather than body shape OR you can up the gawp factor by using the underwear tips above to slip into a jaw dropping figure hugger with your new curves and work it like a red carpet.
- c. You can totally find a fashion ally in trousers and jeans. Experiment with couture looks and severe tailoring to achieve an editorial look worthy of the glossies.
- d. Others may fear tactile fabrics, eye popping patterns and squint worthy colours, but not you, oh no, you can get aboard the good ship bold and ride the wave.
- e. You should make a skinny waist belt your friend, that way you can give your outfits a centre focus and add a little shape without too much hard work.

Final Word

If you look in the mirror and sometimes feel a little boyish in structure, look yourself in the eyes, embrace your body and sing a verse of 'I am woman hear me roar', then get your supermodel figure out that door (with or without the fillets).

JP x

@effortmade